Ocean-born eels live most of their lives on murky river bottoms. When it is time to spawn, they make their way back to the sea -- sometimes slithering over land. They swim 2,500 miles to the middle of the Atlantic, where they were born. Once they arrive, they reproduce and die. They are just one of the remarkable species included in "Mating Games: Reproduction and Survival in the Aquatic World," a special exhibition at the Monterey Bay Aquarium. "Mating Games" is featured from December 18, 1993 through September 4, 1995. For information, call (408) 648-4888.

Community Foundation shows support for youth

The Community Foundation for Monterey County will join over 400 other community foundations around the country during National Community Foundation Week, to promote nonprofit services to America's youth. Community foundations across the U.S. have taken a leading role in tackling youth-related issues by funding a variety of programs designed to help kids overcome the obstacles to healthy development that they face. News headlines remind the public daily that American youngsters cannot read and they skip school, succumb to drugs, carry weapons and even kill each other.

"With the current focus in the media on the vulnerability of youth to drugs, disease, gang violence and early death, we fell it important for people to know that there are successful programs for kids here in Monterey County that they can support," Community Foundation Executive Director Todd Lueders said. "People don't have to wait and wonder if the government is going to be able to solve the problems. Just look at the great success of programs like the Boys and Girls Clubs, or the Community Partnership for Youth, or the SuperKids Program run by the Family Resource Center. These programs all give youngsters a supervised, ongoing way to grow up in a healthy environment with support from their schools, their friends, and their families."

Community foundations gave over $600 million to charities throughout the nation last year. Because they allow people of moderate means as well as the wealthy to establish charitable funds, com-munity foundations are the fastest-growing form of organized philanthropy in the country. "People are finding that community foundations allow them many options as donors to make lasting contributions to their communities and to meet their estate and tax-planning needs as well. They can become philanthropists long before they write their wills," Lueders said. The Community Foundation for Monterey County now has nearly $17 million in 80 different funds, including a General Endowment, field of interest funds, donor advised funds, and restricted funds for special purposes. The Foundation will distribute nearly $2.5 million to local agencies in 1994, and their staff provides all the grant-making services for the $45 million Harden Foundation in Salinas.

"With 1994 National Community Foundation Week, we recognize the tremendous work foundations are accomplishing by helping citizens in communities across our country build better lives for themselves and for their children," Council on Foundations President James A. Joseph said.

CHS parents want safe grad night

Linda Russell and Gloria Johnson need the help of the parents of the CHS students -- even parents of underclassmen. CHS Grad Night will happen again for the third time. It is pretty incredible how many parents love to be involved in this event. Ms. Russell and Ms. Johnson are thrilled with the response and look forward to many of the parents being involved.

There are many reasons as to why there is a Grad Night party. The enclosure from the County gives information on what has become the solution to increasing concerns of drug and alcohol use on graduation night. In the past few years, all the public and many of the private high schools have sponsored All Night Grad Night Parties with overwhelming success. With the support of the school administration, its staff and the community, the parties are put on by parents as a gift to their students. It is truly a wonderful event that the seniors will remember forever, and that the underclassmen will eagerly look forward to.

The enthusiastic endorsement of this event by the parents is greatly needed. The parents' participation in planning and working on the party is needed. The more underclass parents who are involved, the more experience there will be to work on future parties. There will be a meeting once a month, as listed below. The committee is as follows, and has quite a few spots to be filled:

The chairpersons are as follows: Linda Russell and Gloria Johnson, Co-Chairpersons; Lynn Morris, Treasurer; two fundraisers; and Sande Falahati, Secretary. Beth Lawn, Judy Rowley, Suzanne McGowan and Janice DeMayo are in charge of invitations; Susan Lamb and Marcy Murray are the volunteer coordinators; two positions for publicity are available which include minute parties; John Freitas is in charge of security and there is one spot available; Lucy Morris, Judy Harrold, Janyce Anderson, Suzanne Gaily, Beth Lawn, Suzanne McGowan, Carol Covell, Judy Glanville and Lynn Christensen are in charge of food; Bobbie Wolcott, Doug Wolcott and Janice DeMayo are in charge of design; John Freitas and Doug Wolcott are in charge of construction with four spots available; one spot is available for electrical; Janice DeMayo is in charge of entrance; and Lynn Bohnen is in charge of photography.

Other available positions are: Materials acquisition (four spots); one spot for activities (including Casino, games, Karaoke, entertainment and pool); six positions for prizes; one spot for favors; four positions for admissions; and eight positions for cleanup.

The night of the party is wonderful, and many of the people who do not work on the planning will be working the party. The adults will be kept to a minimum, and everyone will be kept working while they are there so that there can be careful scheduling.

Everyone will be called, but senior parents are called last because many of them have relatives and guests visiting. Also, some of their kids would rather not have them there! All senior parents who want to work must contact the volunteer coordinators by April.

The parents' support and time is greatly needed. Parents who see a way in which they can be involved are encouraged to call the volunteer coordinators.

The committee members are looking forward to having a great group of parents this year and putting on the best party yet.

New book on Monterey buildings

"To live much, and without care, come to Monterey" wrote de Borica, the governor of Alta California in 1795 in one of the earliest promotional pieces for this remarkably beautiful city.

This quote is found in Monterey - The First Buildings, a book of over 40 original water colors and as many quotes by the personalities who lived and worked there through the years.

This rare treasure captures historic Monterey as it exists today in views seen through the eyes of Big Sur artist Kipp Stewart. Bridging the gap of time and space, the watercolors are juxtaposed with observations of Monterey from the earliest period of its discovery by Europeans through the present.

"In the spirit of our community, Kipp Stewart has donated everything, all the original art work, all a gift," emphasizes Bob Reese, historian with California State Parks who designed and researched the lively narrative which tells the stories behind the watercolors.

"By working with artists of exceptional quality like Kipp Stewart, we become participants in the creation of the art of the future. We pay homage to the history of the future by supporting the artists of today," says Amy Donohue, Executive Director of the Monterey History and Art Association, a partner in the Monterey - The First Buildings book project along with the City of Monterey and California State Parks. A true collaborative project by and for the community of Monterey, all proceeds will go towards the creation of a new garden at Pacific and Scott Streets in Monterey.

Aquarium's "Mating Games" exhibit continues to month's end

There is only a short while left to explore the Monterey Bay Aquarium's special exhibit, "Mating Games: Reproduction and Survival in the Aquatic World," before it closes on January 2, 1995.

To make a visit to the aquarium and Monterey Peninsula even easier, many local hotels are offering special seasonal discounts on rooms as part of their "Holiday Bounty from Monterey County" vacation packages.

"Mating Games" features more than three dozen species, from shorebirds to seahorses. Each offers insights into different strategies for success.

Among the featured creatures are green sea turtles and a fish called the California grunion -- two species that live in the ocean but come ashore to lay their eggs.

There are dwarf caimans, relatives of the alligator that tend eggs in buried nests, and cichlids, freshwater fish that brood clutches of eggs in their mouths.

"Mating Games" includes fathers who make great mothers, male seahorses that carry their young in a pouch on their bellies and male giant water bugs that tow eggs on their backs. There are colorful tropical wrasses that can change sex as they mature...Amazon mollies, an all-female species...and glass knifefish, animals whose electrical courtship helps them find each other in murky swamps.

"Mating Games" offers more than wild animals with wild stories. It includes games and activities for the family that tell the animals' stories in other ways.

"Mating Games: Reproduction and Survival in the Aquatic World" is open only through January 2, 1995. It is included with regular aquarium admission of $11.25 for adults, $8.25 for seniors, students and active-duty U.S. military, and $5.00 for children ages 3-12 and the disabled.

The aquarium is open from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. daily and from 9:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. during Thanksgiving weekend and from December 26, 1994 to January 2, 1995. It is closed Christmas day. Advance tickets are available by calling (800) 756-3737 in California (out-side California, call (408) 648-4888).

Additional information and aquarium programs and activities are available by calling (408) 648-4888.

MST joins Fort Ord planning group

The Fort Ord Reuse Authority (FORA) has accepted Monterey-Salinas Transit (MST) as an ex officio member of the Authority. "We are particularly pleased that FORA has recognized the important role that transit can play in supporting the reuse of Fort Ord," said Jim Collins, Chairman of the Monterey-Salinas Transit Board of Directors.

Fort Ord has been designated as a national model for base reuse. The purpose of the national model program is to identify lessons emerging from the reuse program which can be used by other military installations which have been sla-ted for closure.

Fort Ord was established in 1917 and served as a staging facility for infantry, and was a basic training base. In January 1990, the Secretary of Defense announced the proposed closure of Fort Ord. The base includes 28,000 acres of land. Over 7,000 acres of the base will be converted to a variety of uses including educational institutions, retail centers, business parks, residential housing and recreational activities. The single largest reuse activity is the establishment of a new California State University Campus, which will ultimately have a student enrollment of approximately 30,000 students.

In May 1994, the Fort Ord Reuse Authority was created under state legislation (SB 899) to prepare, adopt, finance and implement a plan to reuse the land occupied by Fort Ord. According to Collins, "FORA has been charged with preparing plans for the development of a new community. Monterey-Salinas Transit's voice on the FORA Board will help ensure transit is fully integrated into this new community at both the policy and technical levels." Monterey - Salinas Transit has been, and continues to be, involved in transit planning infrastructure at the technical level. The Fort Ord Reuse Authority is a 13-member body comprised of representatives from each of the eight surrounding communities as well as the County of Monterey. In addition, there are eleven ex officio members representing other organizations and local agencies.

FUN IN THE SUN

Dave Lyon

For those of you who missed it this year, our annual Carmel Valley dose of Indian Summer, normally a seven to ten-day period of warm, balmy weather, arrived about three weeks ago and was celebrated by a small group of valley locals gathered out front of Randy's Market. It lasted approximately 17-and-a-half minutes. Then the sun set, the rain came down, and well, you know the rest. Winter is here.

In the spirit of the season, the gang at your Community Youth Center wishes each and every one of you a joyous and happy Thanksgiving, and reminds everyone to pause next week and give thanks for the chance to live in such a beautiful place. Here at the CVCYC we are indeed grateful for all the blessings this year has brought to us, and wish to extend many heart-felt thanks to everyone here in the valley who has supported us throughout this past year.

To help ring in the holiday season, the good folks on the Carmel Valley Park District Board extend to everyone a warm invitation to attend the second annual Carmel Valley Village Christmas tree-lighting ceremony to be held on Saturday, December 3, 1994 at the Community Park. There will be refreshments, entertainment and moving speeches by local and sundry dignitaries. Bring the whole family to enjoy this special, hometown evening event. For more information about the ceremony, call the Community Center Office at 659-3983.

Only 37 more shopping days until...You guessed it, Christmas time is right around the corner, and soon, sooner than you will be able to get all those greeting cards addressed, it will be time for yet another time-honored valley tradition...everybody's favorite...Santa fly-in!

Just as the tree-lighting marks the continuation of a new tradition here in the valley, this 36th (really) Santa fly-in marks the return of an annual favorite, and is a very popular Christmas ritual for everyone.

This year's fly-in is scheduled for Saturday, December 10, 1994. Santa and Mrs. Claus will arrive via airplane at 11:00 a.m. at the Carmel Valley Airfield, where they will be welcomed by the usual collection of fire trucks, floats, old cars, horses, kids on bikes, clowns, dancers, and at least two Golden Retrievers wearing felt reindeer horns. Kids: Tell your folks to get you there early for the best seats on the fire trucks! After greeting the crowds, Santa and Mrs. Claus will be escorted by parade through the village to the Community Center on Ford Road where they will hear Christmas wishes from everyone, young and old alike. Do not miss this once-a-year chance to tell Santa what you really want this year!

A big part of the Santa fly-in is the parade, which gives everyone here in the valley a chance to get involved in this great event. Your Community Youth Center wants to encourage all persons to be a part of this year's festivities and to join the fly-in parade!

Get a group of your friends together, put on some moose antlers, dance on the back of a flatbed truck, drive your vintage autos, or just wear a silly hat and play the kazoo. You could become a part of valley history and maybe even get your picture in the "Carmel Valley Sun." Contact the CVCYC office for complete information on how to be famous this year. Everyone is encouraged to get involved!

Also coming this December 3rd...the annual toy fair, to be held at the Community Center from 8:30a.m. until noon. Kids of all ages with used but good condition toys to part with can make extra Christmas money by selling them at the toy fair! Start digging through your closets now, gang, for all those toys you no longer use (Barney and his Easy-Bake Oven, etc...) then contact the Community Center to arrange for a table at the fair. This is also an excellent chance to get great deals on toys and get a jump on your holiday shopping! Call 659-3983 for complete information!

And finally...the new Community Homework Center is now open, and already fast becoming popular with local kids. This special center, developed by the CVCYC with grant money from the AT&T, still needs a few community volunteers to fill time slots on Wednesdays from 3:30-5:30 p.m. and on Thursdays from 2:00 to 3:30 p.m. The Homework Center offers valley youngsters of all ages a place to study in a supportive environment, and a chance to improve skills on one of the state-of-the-art computers. Any retired educators out there? Get involved now, and support your communities' effort to provide this valuable service to the children of Carmel Valley.

Fire districts continue merger talks

By Elizabeth Cowley

The Boards of Directors from both the Mid Carmel Valley and the Carmel Valley Fire Protection Districts held a study session last Thursday, November 17. This study session was called to discuss and vote on the resolution directing both districts to study the feasibility of consolidation. The resolution was approved by both districts.

The Mid Carmel Valley Fire Protection District was formed in 1973 and is governed by a 5 member Board of Directors. It serves 8 square miles out of 1 fire station and employs 35 people; both paid and volunteer. The Carmel Valley fire Protection District was formed in 1946 and is governed by a 3 member Board of Directors. The Carmel Valley District serves 12 square miles and has 33 employees; 4 are paid and 29 are volunteer.

This study session was brought about due to a joint desire to investigate how to best serve the community with the funding available. Fire districts are not income generating entities and thus their funding is not under their direct control and subject to changing political climates.

The County has sent consultants to investigate the consolidation of these 2 districts. These consultants cost the taxpayers money and furthermore it is the belief of both fore districts that the fire districts themselves are best suited to make this determination - not outside consultants. Both districts want to be fully prepared and informed about all the impacts of both joining forces and remaining separate. The districts intend to make their own decision based on what will best serve the community prior to having a decision imposed on them by the County.

Mid Carmel Valley Fire Chief Carmichael outlined the options available. Options include: do nothing, a mutual aid agreement, an automatic aid agreement, functional consolidation, consolidation, and to merge. Consolidation would mean that both Boards of Directors would remain, but there would be only 1 service force. A merger would mean 1 Board and the creation of 1 new district incorporating the 2 current districts.

The schedule of progress for the adopted resolution is to first appoint a task force composed of Board Members, volunteers, and paid employees from both districts. The Task Force is directed to write a draft report detailing available options and impact by March 1995. The draft report will then be reviewed by the Boards of Directors and the employees from each district. Comments and reccommendation will be considered and incorporated into the Final Report to be completed by April of 1995. In May of 1995, the Final Report wil be presented to the Board members of each district and a vote will be taken at that time to determine whether or not to consolidate.

WHAT'S NEXT? Mel Vercoe

First, the good news. After being bugged about it by yours truly for over three years, the State Water Resources Board has finally decided to act on the seawater intrusion problem that is destroying the water supply that is needed for Salinas, Prunedale, Castroville, Marina, and the new universities at Fort Ord.

It's now a little late. It will take years of legal hassling (if the State Board can get enough funding to hire more attorneys) to go through the steps to get the authority to reduce the main cause of the intrusion, over pumping, mainly for agriculture. As luck would have it, the ocean is already here, knocking on the door, and said ocean couldn't care less, personally, if 150,000 dumb human beings run out of drinking water.

I used to get coffee for a nickel at the coffee shop next door to the Steinbeck Theater in Cannery Row. I think Sambo's on Fremont also had nickel coffee. Cannery Row sure could have done without the last ten years of uncompleted foundation work, concrete walls and columns, complete with rusty reinforcing rods going nowhere, the end of somebody's dream of what I suppose would have been a luxury complex, a real credit to the neighborhood.

The sidewalk murals helped, but if the unholy mess behind the murals is going to remain that way for another ten years, then we should do additional things, expanding on the mural idea, to hide some more of the mess. That should be no problem in a community loaded with inventive talent.

For example, all of the ground within the project areas could be leveled and covered with a concrete slab.

The concrete walls and support columns could be covered with artificial grass. The rusty reinforcing rods could be painted tree limb color, and bent to horizontal positions, so that artificial leaves and flowers and flower baskets and oriental lanterns could be hung from them. Uses for the space could include gift shops, bonafide fortune teller booths, high class hot dog stands, and tables and chairs where people could sit, free, and contemplate while resting. How about it, you budding artists and designers out there in the boondocks? Let's have some "Save Cannery Row for Posterity" ideas.

On the national scene, seems like our advanced civilization could have, by now, found a better or more humane way to hold off inflation than to give one political appointee, Alan Greenspan, the power to occasionally raise interest rates countrywide.

This definitely doesn't help the "rich getting richer" and the "poor getting poorer" problem, which, along with overpopulation, makes Peace on Earth a hopeless dream.

Maybe it's just plain human nature for us humans, whether affluent or on the poor side, to not bother to look at prices, either at gas stations or at grocery stores. How long would it take to reduce prices (and inflation) if everybody started looking at price tags?

LETTERS to the Editor

Response To Article By Lee Phelps

I want to make reference to an article (From Where I Stand) by Mr. Lee Phelps that appeared on October 20, 1994 in your paper.

The article deals with illegal immigration issues. Mr. Phelps is concerned that illegal aliens are taking over California. He has the right to think that, but that is not the case. He supports Proposition 187.

If Proposition 187 becomes a law, the implications and the results will be devastating to the Hispanic community, an insult to the human rights and to the decent standards of living demanded by the government to its people.

Proposition 187 calls for divisionism among Whites, Blacks and Hispanics that the outcome may result in a Hispanic holocaust like the Nazi regime against the Jewish people. That is outrageous. That cannot ever happen in America!

Perhaps, the author has forgotten the true history of immigration and ethnicity in America. Before anyone begins discussing his points of view on immigration matters, he needs to be aware of "Ravenstein's Law Of Migration" and the "push-pull" and "means" factors of migration.

Mr. Phelps mentions the facts that illegal immigrants are sucking off California's social services, and to support his arguments, provides some figures on behalf of Proposition 187. Nevertheless, the article does not stress some critical points, as why the state's economy has gone awry, such as the end of the cold war, large companies moving overseas, the closure of army bases, the present recession, the mismanagement of the state's administration, and so forth. If all these issues are true, why are politicians misleading the public bla-ming illegal immigrants for California's sick economy? It is true that some illegal immigrants may abuse the social services, but it is unfair to include all Hispanics in general in that spectrum, especially the children.

If Proposition 187 is passed, the social problems in America will rise at high speed. The spread of communicable diseases by the lack of medical attention will also be high. Juvenile delinquency will rise due to the fact that right to education will be denied to illegal immigrants' children. In relation to the latter, in Plyler v. Doe (1982), the U.S. Supreme Court ruled out that it "was unconstitutional to deny education in Texas on the legal characteristics over which children have little control."

What Mr. Phelps' article really reflects is pure rhetoric using the illegal immigrants issue for political campaigns. Hispanics are being used as scapegoats by politicians to pave their own road to the state legislature and to the governor's seat.

Only when the nation is in trouble do these types of xenophobic attacks become evident. In the 1830s to the mid-1850s the anti-Catholic movement flourished in the United States and was aimed against Irish and Germans. The passage of The Chinese Exclusion Act of 1992 and The Immigration Act of 1924 are the proof of the nativism that kept divided America in those days, more recently The Immigration Reform Act of 1986.

Even President Clinton has urged California's voters not to vote for Proposition 187. Mr. Clinton is aware of the catastrophic effects if said proposition is voted in. Proposition 187 is evil, racist and unconstitutional!!

Finally, illegal aliens are not parasites, they are human beings like anyone else, like Mr. Phelps and I.

Dear Editor, Carmel Valley Sun:

For forty years the Carmel Valley Community Youth Center's key mission has been to help maintain the quality of life we enjoy. Folks like yourselves held a vision to come together, to create a true community center where we could gather with our friends and neighbors, to plan, to celebrate, to learn and to have fun.

The challenges facing all communities are beginning to confront ours, and CVCYC is committed to doing its part to respond to these challenges, providing inexpensive or free recreational, cultural and educational opportunities for all ages, ensuring that our youth have an opportunity for wholesome and healthy alternatives.

The summer concert series, swim scholarships for qualifying families, and Surf 'N Safari for youth group fund raising are only a few examples of how CVCYC is working to succeed. But they need your help.

The projects which are on the front burner for becoming a reality this year are: A new homework center for school-age children for all Carmel Valley schools; a full-time youth recreation center with games, snack bar, gym and theater; renovation of our bathroom facilities with the addition of a unisex handicapped bathroom; and the installation of a self-operating personnel lift at poolside to make the community pool accessible to all Carmel Valley residents.

CVCYC works to provide programs and services that are affordable and a park that is always pristine, but it comes at great cost. Ninety percent of all income comes from the community in the form of donations, memberships, facility rentals and pool usage. They are far short of the necessary funds to meet the growth expectations of the next six months.

You may mail your donation to: CVCYC, P.O. Box 124, Carmel Valley, CA 93924.

Dear Editor, Carmel Valley Sun:

Carmel Valley and the Monterey Peninsula have lost a true friend with the death of Raz Bellici on November 8th.

Raz was a leader, and bright and shining star of, many local organizations during his brief sojum with us. None will miss him more than Carmel Valley Kiwanis.

Raz was perpetually at the forefront of any function or activity to raise money for or enhance the well being of our community or youth. He was "champion of champions" of our goals.

Although we will sorely miss his leadership and talents, it will be his "persona" his wit, flair and love of life that will be irreplaceable.

The Carmel Valley Kiwanis will not forget "The RAZ."

Godspeed.....

HEALTH WATCH

Steve Davalos, D.C.

The color is first red, becoming gradually darker, then purple, fading to a brownish yellow. The colors will, within two or three weeks, disappear. Bruises, with their autumn colors, are an everyday occurrence. Barring serious systemic disease or in-home physical abuse, the common bruise is trivial.

Yet bruises, especially frequent bruises, suggest vascular fragility. Bruises occur from the leakage of blood from the blood vessels. Blood seeps out of the vessels and becomes visible through the skin.

Many local plants can be used to speed the healing of bruises. For example, a decoction made from the roots of comfrey and applied with a compress will speed the healing of bruises. This decoction is composed of approximately 30 gms dried root and 750 ml water reduced to 500 ml fluid. Comfrey is found growing in ditches and watersides and in moist fields. Comfrey powder and golden seal mixed with aloe vera juice is very good for bruises.

Another common herb useful for bruises is Solomon Seal. The powdered root of Solomon Seal in a wet compress will take away the black and blue marks of bruises. This is an attractive plant resembling Lily of the Valley. It grows to about eighteen inches and bears white tubular flowers that droop from the stems in clusters. It is a common garden plant which flowers in the late spring. It can be found wild in the woodlands.

Arnica montana, not found locally, is a popular plant for external applications. Arnica is frequently available in a cream or gel. This remedy is very useful for the care of bruises. It is available in most health food stores. Arnica montana is not to be applied to open wounds.

From a nutritional perspective, one can reduce vascular fragility with vitamin supplementation. Vitamin C, bioflavinoids, and Vitamin E are the most important vitamins to reduce bruising. Bioflavinoids (200 mg three times a day) have been shown to be effective in reducing bleeding in sports injuries and post-operative patients. Vitamin C (1.5 gm) combined with bioflavinoids (150 mg) reduces the tendency toward capillary bleeding in patients who need to take anti-coagulant medication. Vitamin E (400-600 mg) is helpful in cases of vascular fragility caused by infection or drug reactions.

Although the lowly bruise can be unsightly, it is usually insignificant. Yet bruises have been prevalent enough for our ancestors to seek out natural remedies to ease the ache and pain of bruises. Fortunately for us, the Carmel Valley is rich in these natural plant resources.

Bob Ingram

Today we present the final installment of our series entitled "A Glossary of Taxable Fixed Income Terms." If you have ever overheard local financial "types" talking and wondered, what does that term mean, this could help.

Mortgage Backed Securities: Representing the direct ownership in a pool of mortgage loans, these securities "pass through" interest and principal payments to holders on a monthly basis. They are typically issued by Ginnie Mae, Fannie Mae and Freudie Mac, offering government or federal agency guarantees.

Par Value: The stated or "nominal" value of a bond (typically $1000) that is paid to the bondholder at maturity. It is also the dollar amount upon which interest is calculated.

Redemption: The retiring or repurchasing of issued bonds prior to maturity. Issuers redeem bonds prior to maturity to reduce or refinance their outstanding debt obligations.

Treasury Securities: Treasury bills, notes and bonds, direct obligations, backed by the "full faith and credit" of the U.S. Government, which guarantee timely payment of principal and interest.

Volatility: The measure of a security's exposure to price fluctuations within a short-term period. In general, the longer a security's maturity, the greater its price volatility.

Yield-To-Maturity: The annual rate of return an investor receives, assuming that a bond is held to maturity, taking into account the purchase price, capital gains or loss, interest rate, maturity and reinvestment rate.

Zero Coupon Bond: A bond that is sold at a deep discount from its maturity value and makes no periodic interest payments. Instead, interest accumulates at a stated rate, compounding semi-annually and growing to full value at maturity. Zeros have maturities ranging from three months to 40 years and are most often issued by the Federal Government.

Dollars and Sence

Selecting the best location for your business gives you a competitive edge. The following tips will help you select the ideal space for your venture.

Evaluate your specific needs to best determine the amount and type of space you need. Be sure to consider future expansion. Moving expenses are costly, so you should plan to stay in the same location for several years.

Try to match your location to your customers by defining them as specifically as possible. Classify them by age, sex, income level, and other factors. Then select a location to attract these individuals.

If your business does not depend on customer traffic, consider a location that is convenient to your vendors. This strategy may save you time and money down the road.

Your business neighbors can affect the image of your company. Try to find a location near other businesses that attract similar customers or offer services that complement yours. For example, a tailor could succeed on a busy street among clothing stores. A professional service firm, however, would project a better image in a building or neighborhood with similar professionals.

When evaluating a potential location, be sure to investigate its rental history. How long has the space been empty? Who occupied it last? How long did previous tenants stay in the location? Why did they leave? The answers to these questions can help you determine if your business could succeed in the location.

Most new business owners rent office space. But before you sign a rental agreement, find out if repairs and utilities are included in your rent. Then ask if the landlord plans to pass along prorated tax increases, as well as periodic increases in your rent.

Be sure to calculate any additional costs and factor them into your business plan. Keep in mind, it is important to generate the income necessary to cover any increase in expenses.

Leases typically offer three-, five-, or 10-year terms. You can usually negotiate other terms. For example, try to negotiate a short-term lease with an option to renew for a longer period. This allows you to get your business running without making a long-term financial commitment. It also gives you the option to stay in the same location.

REAL ESTATE Rand Smith

When a house doesn't sell, there are usually three reasons given. 1. It's over priced. 2. It's in poor condition (which implies it's overpriced). 3. The overall market condition is poor (in other words, it's overpriced).

These infer that the reason the property did not sell was beyond the control of the agent. As a matter of fact, these reasons directly accuse the seller as the culprit - the greed monger. Yet, when a property is sold, who takes all the credit? The real estate agent. "I Just Sold Your Neighbor's House," the mail piece reads.

This is not only unfair, it's a distortion of the true process. Real estate is no different than any other commodity as a product in a marketplace. Any product can be sold for too much or too little based on either the buyer's or seller's lack of true knowledge. But in an open market, with both a knowledgeable seller and buyer, the price is established by the supply and demand; the sale is made by mutually informed principals.

The definition of "marketing" might be to expose the product to the greatest number of knowledgeable prospects in a given period of time, to find the most suitable buyer.

The truth is, only the seller can "sell" the property. The question is, can the seller effectively "market" the property? Is a particular buyer the "best" buyer for the property? How much time might we allot to find a better candidate, before we reach the law of decreasing returns? Where can we have the greatest impact to find the largest pool of qualified leads?

Today, as the real estate marketplace begins to shrink, the need for real estate marketing increases dramatically. The traditional methods of selling a home that worked only a few short years ago are no longer effective. Do they still work?

Of course. Record players still work, but they're no longer competitive. Open houses and flyers still expose properties, but not with the same impact. Why? Because a couple of years ago, the world was searching for property and buying.

Today the world is for sale. A 3 bedroom Carmel house on a quiet street used to compete with comparable homes in the neighborhood. Now, that same house competes with Pacific Grove, Prunedale, maybe even Oregon. The choices are immense.

Therefore, the "net" that must be cast to find the potential buyer must be bigger. Much bigger.

So where are the buyers? They're either in the market already, or they're not in the market yet. If they're not in the market yet, they're either getting ready to get in the market, or they're not ready yet.

Simple.

Now, which among these is most likely to buy today? Most buyers that are currently in the market have already seen some houses. That means they've already spoken to one or more real estate agents. That means that very likely, some real estate agent is looking for property with, or for them.

If the most qualified buyer is driving around town in another real estate agent's car, an effective marketing campaign would be to try and convince that agent to turn into your driveway. Once they're in you driveway, that other agent should be schooled on how to show your property, so the showing is done professionally.

If they're in the market, and not working with an agent, then they are scanning the ads, or looking at signs. Good advertisement should welcome them in, not immediately try and close them. An ad that allows for further information, perhaps in several other languages, is more likely to attract serious buyers than the hyperbole ad claiming this property to be the best deal of the 20th century. Nobody likes being insulted or patronized.

If a buyer is getting ready to get in the market, they either have a house to sell, a relocation to complete, or a need or desire for more information on what or where they can afford.

If they have a house to sell, an effective marketing campaign would have a "system" on trading up. It is not enough to say it's a great trade-up market. That's too abstract. Many people need an analysis of what the longer term benefits are, or what the potential downside might be. Those sellers who have already committed to trading up need to target (and be targeted to) prospective properties.

If they have a relocation to complete, an effective marketing campaign would attract them from their source. When moving to another city, it's exciting to see what you can buy. It's like mail-order shopping. Because those buyers probably have houses to sell, an effective campaign would aim towards their agents, where the loyalty is already established.

If the buyers are seeking more information, an effective marketing campaign would be educational. It would have some method of converting renters into buyers. It would essentially be creating a new market share. While the buyers groomed on this program today may not be ready to buy your property, yesterday's "graduates" certainly would be.

Finally, wherever they come from, the buyer must judge your property. You are going to have to make the serious decisions on pricing. The fact is, even if you don't have to sell, you have to do what the people who have to sell do, otherwise it won't be selected. In truth, if the property is overpriced, it really isn't even on the market.

An effective marketing campaign stresses the importance and urgency of this fact in the beginning, not at the end. After all, when the buyer IS found, only you can sell it, and you deserve the credit.

VALLEY HOMES

Dick Barratt

Carmel Valley's a wonderful place to live! The large lots and rural atmosphere make this one of the most comfortable and desirable areas in all of Monterey County.

I spend a lot of time walking, cycling, and driving through our various neighborhoods, and as much time on the hiking trails in the vicinity as I possibly can. It's a great way to meet fellow Valley dwellers and get a true feeling for the uniqueness and variety of this land we call home.

A recurring question I get when talking with folks during my wanderings centers on the applicability of real estate statistics to Carmel Valley property. After all, those confusing figures about area real estate appear with rather frightening regularity in various media forms. The gist of the questions tend to be something like: "So what? What do they mean to me? Just what use are those funny numbers, anyway?"

Well, let's take a look from our stand point as Valley residents.

Let me say for starters, statistics are fascinating!

Yes, they really are. And they do have a myriad of uses. Sitting here in my office, I find myself literally surrounded by pages of published statistics form numerous sources focused on the real estate environment of Monterey County. The numbers are extraordinary for all the information they impart (but then, I've always been something of a numbers nut, to the point of actually enjoying math homework in school! That should make even the most stouthearted among you nervous!).

From all those little figures I, and my fellow real estate agents, can glean such enlightening data as: how many houses have been sold in a given area over the past however-long-I might-want-to-know; what the median price of homes was for that period; what percentage of the average listing price was actually received; and so on and so forth.

All of this is great -- if you like this sort of entertainment.

The real question, however, is: what value is this mass of statistical information to you, the individual homeowner, here in Carmel Valley?

Well, if you're one of the hundreds of licensed real estate agents in the county, they of course hold the same enchantment for you as they do for me. If you're a math teacher, or engaged in some other technical field, then they may prove an interesting study in numerical relationships.

If, on the other hand, you're among the hundreds of Valley residents engaged in the hundreds of other occupations that make this beautiful land we live in tick these numbers probably have about as much relevance as all that tiny print on the bottom of cereal boxes!

The good news is: those numbers are among the things the average Valley resident need not be troubled with! Fact is, the numbers are only of relevance to those of us working in the real estate field on a day-to-day basis.

For us Valley residents, it goes without saying, we don't fit a general statistical mold.

We enjoy one of the most unique areas of the Central Coast. After all, isn't that one of the reasons we're here? We revel in an ambience unique on the Monterey Peninsula. We have our own climate, our own ecosystems, our own recreational specialties, our own superb restaurants and watering holes, and we have our own historical background and cultural perspective.

It's only natural our homes should be equally unique. With very few exceptions, each home in the Valley is distinct in construction, character and design. This is especially true for homes located east of Mid Valley.

What, then, is the relevance of those statistics as far as the Carmel Valley homeowner is concerned?

Breathe a sigh of relief. The answer, I'm sure you'll be pleased to learn, is very little.

Basically, only about 10% of all that data applies to the Valley, and that's certainly an easy enough statistic to deal with! And the problem of sorting out which of those numbers applies to your particular home, if you're considering selling, can be given to your real estate agent, whose job it is to sort through what appears to be an overwhelming mass of numerical confusion. Your agent can then help you apply the data correctly to your unique situation.

A final note for the reader who, even though not planning to sell, has a burning desire to know "just how do all those numbers apply to my property?" Go ahead, give the real estate agent of your choice a call. We all access the same information and do basically the same thing. As part of our service to you, the homeowner, most of us are more than happy to come by and translate those numbers into something meaningful for your property.

El Nino conditions developing in Pacific

Recent atmospheric and oceanic trends indicate that the El Nino phenomenon associated with abnormally warm water episodes is developing in the tropical Pacific.

The Commercial Department's National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration reported today climate conditions similar to those in September 1991 and September 1992 that were followed by El Nino/Southern Oscillation (ENSO) conditions during early 1992 and early 1993. During ENSO conditions, positive sea surface temperature anomalies dominate the tropical and subtropical Pacific Ocean east of the date line and water temperatures exceed 30 degrees Celsius (86 degrees F) near the equator at the date line.

During El Nino episodes, abnormally low pressure is observed in the eastern tropical Pacific and abnormally high pressure is found over Indonesia and northern Australia. The normal pattern of tropical cloudiness and precipitation is also disrupted. Rainfall that normally falls over Indonesia shifts eastward over the abnormally warm ocean waters of the central equatorial Pacific. The recent pattern of drought over Indonesia and eastern Australia, where warm episodes are often first noticed, indicates this shift in precipitation.

Since early 1990, the surface waters in the tropical Pacific have averaged warmer than normal temperatures, and ENSO conditions have been common.

The period of 1992 through 1993 had one of the longest periods of continuously warm episode conditions observed during the past 100 years. After a brief return to nearly normal conditions in early 1994, warm episode conditions have gradually redeveloped in the tropical Pacific.

Major advances during the past ten years in predicting ocean surface temperatures in the tropical Pacific allow scientists to predict that abnormal warmth in the central equatorial Pacific will continue into early 1995. However, Scientists cannot predict the exact magnitude of the warmth or the degree to which certain regions of the world will be impacted. NOAA's Climate Analysis Center will continue to closely
